

Abstract

A computer network is used to improve the profitability of one or more business entities. The network receives business-related data from at least two business entities and stores at least 5 some of the data from each of the business entities in a common database. Then, in accordance with the terms of an agreement among the business entities, the network allows at least one of the business entities to receive information gathered from the common database.

005490-2246960